Take your classroom to Cockatoo Island and sleep under the stars

As one of Australia's most historically and culturally significant sites, Cockatoo Island offers the perfect destination for your school group.

The island's history starts with Aboriginal occupation and encompasses many of the major landmarks of colonial and post-colonial Australian history. Its structures and relics tell the stories of convicts and orphans, of workers and wars, offering a unique opportunity for your students to interact with living history through our engaging primary and secondary programs.

As a UNESCO World Heritage site, Cockatoo Island presents a unique opportunity for students to engage with living history – and have fun – while still being in the heart of Australia's largest city.

Our campground makes the learning experience even more fun. Cockatoo Island has all the amenities your school group needs — including hot showers, a large camp kitchen, ten BBQs, fridges, microwaves and access to boiling water.

Our Programs

The UNESCO World Heritage-listed Cockatoo Island played an important role in Australia's maritime and defence history and it retains an incredible legacy of more than 80 colonial and industrial assets. For Sydney's Aboriginal people, Cockatoo Island was known as 'Wareamah', believed to mean 'woman land'. The Cockatoo Island education programs explore this vast history, and are designed to meet the requirements of several key syllabus areas of the NSW Curriculum. They have been developed to foster enquiry-based learning and to provide a fun and interactive learning experience for students. Comprehensive learning materials are available pre and post-visit.
